Frontiers: A Journal of Women Studies (ISSN 0160-9009)
Published by the University of Nebraska Press

Frontiers is one of the oldest and most respected feminist journals in the country. Frontiers retains its original commitment to a broad mix of scholarly work, personal essays, and the arts as well as to multicultural and interdisciplinary perspectives offered in accessible language. The cross-disciplinary and culturally diverse nature of the journal's feminist content makes it an ideal source of women's history, cultural theory, literature, essays, art, criticism, and pedagogical approaches. Frontiers is primarily interested in work that bridges disciplines. The journal prides itself on publishing articles that reach beyond single texts or single disciplines with the intention of reaching audiences beyond the academic.
